As a follow-up to our note yesterday, Secretary of the Treasury Steven Mnuchin announced today (in a tweet) that “Tax Day” is being moved from April 15 to July 15. Accordingly, federal tax return filing obligations, and not just the deadline for paying federal income taxes, has been moved to such later date. In addition, some states are continuing to evaluate whether to make similar changes. For example, California and Connecticut have already announced that they are following the lead of the federal government in pushing back their tax payment and filing deadlines to July 15 and there are reports today that New York is following suit.
